Accomplished writer and public speaker, Kevin Hofmann, has appeared across the United States speaking to parents, students and professionals. His perspective and light-hearted yet contemplative view is sought by many. Kevin has been interviewed by media including Nightline ABC and NPR. He is quickly becoming a trusted voice on the topics of race and adoption.

Kevin's memoir, Growing Up Black In White, brings his journey as a biracial, transracial adoptee to life. It has been used in numerous colleges and universities as part of curricula in the schools of social work, psychology, education and multiculturalism. Because his story also addresses the impact of race and culture in society, it serves as a catalyst for open discussions on diversity and inclusion as well as race and culture. Kevin has worked with several K-12 school districts and adoption agencies as a diversity consultant.

Hofmann lives with his wife and two sons in Toledo, Ohio. He is a committed CASA (Court Appointed Special Advocate) volunteer, Secretary on the board of Adopt America Network, and co-facilitates an adoption support group for Adoption Network Cleveland.
